Seen passage-13

On January 21 in 1793, a Square in Paris known as the Place de la Revolution was packed with men, women and children. In the middle of the Square stood the guillotine, which was used by the French to put to death criminals and traitors. Suddenly a cry rose from the people waiting there. The man whom they had come to see executed came into sight in an open cart. The cart stopped at the foot of the ladder which led up to the platform where the guillotine stood. The man got down from the cart. He climbed the ladder and fell on his knees under the sharp blade, which dropped and cut off his head. The head of the lifeless man fell into a basket.

The head that fell was the head of Louis XVI, who had been crowned King of France in 1774. Then the crowd had cried 'Long live the King!' Now they cried 'Long live the nation!' What had caused this change in the French people? There were many reasons, but one of the most important of them was the injustice of the French system of taxation. Almost all the taxes were paid by the peasants. The wealthy, the powerful and the nobles escaped taxation almost entirely. There were many parts of France where the peasants lived like animals. Arthur Young, an Englishman who travelled through France at that time, tells how he met a peasant woman whom he mistook for an old woman of seventy. Her age was twenty-eight! Even the peasants who were more prosperous were afraid to live in a comfortable manner. They knew what happened to people who did so. Their taxes were increased.

The merchants and professional men, who lived in the towns, were also dissatisfied. They suffered from the great variety of restrictions which were placed on trade and on the conduct of business. Both they and the peasants wanted freedom in the management of their own affairs, which the government prevented them from achieving.

These demands, which were made with more and more force as the dissatisfaction grew, finally compelled the government to call a meeting of the States-General. This was the only institution which represented the nation. It consisted of representatives of the three 'estates' or sections of the community, the nobles, the clergy and the common people. It had not been consulted by the kings of France for 175 years, which meant that the kings and their advisers had grown more and more out of touch with the feelings and the wishes of the people that they governed.

The States-General met on May 5 1789. Immediately a quarrel broke out between the representatives of the people, who were known as the 'Third Estate', and those of the other two estates. The representatives of the Third Estate declared that they were the only group which could speak for the French people. They called themselves the 'National Assembly', and took an oath that they would not disperse until their demands were met. The people of Paris supported them with violent demonstrations, which forced the King and his ministers to give in to them. The series of events, which led to the execution of Louis XVI and the declaration of a republic, followed from this point. The French Revolution had broken out.

The Abbé Siéyès, who took part in these events and wrote about them, asked, 'What is the Third Estate?' He gave the answer himself. 'Everything.' 'What has it been until now?' 'Nothing.' 'What does it desire to be?' 'Something.' It was the Third Estate which had suffered most under the monarchy. The Third Estate was, therefore, determined to destroy that monarchy and the nobility and clergy that had supported it.

Read the following passage and answer the questions

Bangladesh needs to find out locally driven solutions and resources to address the healthcare challenges that are rising with the increase in ageing population, non-communicable diseases and environmental pollution, health policy analysts said. They said Bangladesh faces multiple challenges -- declining of funding from the development partners mostly led by the US as well as LDC graduation next year -- when loans will be expensive. They made these observations at a seminar titled "Navigating the New Landscape of Global Health: Strategies for Bangladesh" organized by the foreign ministry at the Foreign Service Academy today. World Bank Senior Operations Officer Iffat Mahmud said funding decline not only is a challenge but also is an opportunity for domestic resources mobilization and efficient use of fund.

"We need to now set priorities and act accordingly," she said. Iffat Mahmud said by 2027, more than 7 percent people of Bangladesh will be more than 65 years of old, which will increase to 20 percent by 2050. There will also be many more 90 years old plus people putting more pressure on the healthcare system. According to government data, more than 67 percent of expenses on medical purpose in Bangladesh is out of pocket, while non-communicable diseases including diabetes, cardiac diseases and cancer are on the rise. Iffat Mahmud stressed that the government should focus strong primary health care system free of cost which will reduce the healthcare cost of the tertiary level. Health should be looked at from multisectoral perspective, which means nutrition, good food habits, air pollution need to be included in it. Also, the government can think of tobacco taxation with twin purpose -- reducing smoking and increasing government revenue, she said.

Foreign Affairs Adviser Touhid Hossain said Bangladesh has facilitated the treatment of more than 159 July fighters in four countries through bilateral arrangements. He said that his ministry plays a critical role at the intersection of health and diplomacy, working with global platforms and bilateral partners to advance Bangladesh's health priorities. He highlighted Bangladesh's engagement in pandemic agreement negotiations, non-communicable disease forums and partnerships involving health workforce development and hospital infrastructure.

Read the following passage and answer the questions

To many people, especially working people, co-operation means the Co-operative Movement. This movement was started by working people for the benefit of working people. It began in Rochdale, an industrial town in the North of England, in 1844. In that year a group of people who were employed in the factories of Rochdale decided that they would open a shop. This may not perhaps be considered a very original decision, or one that could be important for anybody except the people who took it. It was, however, of worldwide importance, though nobody could have guessed this at the time. The decision was, in fact, original in one very important detail, namely that it was taken by people who were to be the customers as well as the owners of the shop. A small sum of money was contributed by each member of the scheme. None of them was able to contribute much, but the total of their contributions was sufficient to pay for the premises of the shop and for the goods which were needed to stock it. The profit which was made by the sale of the goods to members was used to buy more goods, and any money left over after these goods had been bought was divided out amongst the members. In this way they were able to buy necessary goods at reasonable prices and also to share in the profit from their own enterprise.

The main principles which were adopted by the Rochdale co-operators when they opened their shop were: 1. Open membership: Anyone living in the Rochdale area was allowed to join, 2. Democratic control (one member, one vote), 3. Distribution of surplus income amongst members, once all other expenses had been paid, 4. Political and religious neutrality, 5. Trading for cash only: Members had to pay for their purchases before they could take them away from the shop, 6. Encouragement of education. These principles have been recognized throughout the world as the basis of a genuine co-operative movement. From its humble beginnings in Rochdale the movement has spread to many countries. Local Co-operative Societies have been founded for trading throughout Britain, and a central organization, the Co-operative Wholesale Society, manufactures a wide variety of goods which member Societies can buy from it to sell in their shops. It also acts as a link between them and helps them to co-operate nationally as well as locally. The International Co-operative Alliance has also been founded to make this co-operation possible amongst members of the movement with similar principles all over the world, in any country where such societies have been or will be founded. It would take a long time to describe all the activities which have been started as a result of the decision taken by the Rochdale Co-operators. Almost 13 million people are members of the Co-operative Movement in Britain, and societies have been founded abroad for all sorts of purposes from simple trading and running shops to hiring farm machinery to members who cannot afford to buy their own; and Marketing Societies have been recognized as the best way for producers of food and other crops to sell their produce. This result of their decision to co-operate was certainly not foreseen by the founders of the Rochdale Co-operative Society, but it is the best memorial to them and to their enterprise.

Read the following passage and answer the questions

International Mother Earth Day, on 22 April, promotes harmony with nature and reminds us of the importance of protecting all the different ecosystems and species on our planet. It's a special celebration that brings together people from around the world to remember that planet Earth is our home and we want to live in harmony with nature. We are all responsible for protecting our planet and looking after all the species that live here. April 22 was first established by the UN as International Mother Earth Day in 2009, joining groups that had previously celebrated Earth Day on the same date. The UN website explains that the idea of 'Mother Earth' is used because it 'reflects the interdependence that exists among human beings, other living species and the planet we all inhabit'.

On this day, environmental organizations from all over the world come together to highlight the urgent need to protect the many ecosystems that make up our environment. These ecosystems are under attack from climate change and the natural disasters caused by rising temperatures: forest fires, floods and terrible storms. More than a million animal and plant species are in danger of extinction through loss of habitat, mainly due to human activity. This, in turn, is leading to outbreaks of deadly diseases that spread from wildlife to humans. On International Mother Earth Day, environmentalists call for action to reverse this damage.

The first Earth Day was celebrated in 1970 in the USA after a decade of local protests about air and water pollution in the United States. In 1969, people were angry about a terrible oil spill in Santa Barbara, California, and the damage it caused. US Senator Gaylord Nelson called for a national 'teach-in', bringing together students and teachers to discuss key issues of pollution and conservation.

On 22 April 1970, 20 million people, approximately ten per cent of the total population of the States at the time, joined the 'teach-in' and met in streets, parks and universities across the land to call for a healthy, clean, sustainable environment. Some people think of that day as the birth of the modern environmental movement.

Twenty years later, in 1990, Earth Day went global. More than 200 million people in 141 countries came together to call for environmental issues to be discussed on the world stage. In 1995, Senator Nelson was given an award for his work for the environment.

Today more than one billion people all over the world come together each year to celebrate International Mother Earth Day and remind politicians that action needs to be taken to move towards a more sustainable way of life that works for both people and the planet.

1. Read the passage carefully and answer the questions given below.

Long ago goods were manufactured by craftsmen, who were skilled workmen. A craftsman was proud of each article he made. He spent a long time in making it and took great care over its manufacture, and people paid a high price for it when it was finished. All the luxurious Persian Carpets, the beautiful Chinese pottery and the hand-made lace of certain European countries were made in this way. But these articles were bought by only the rich. Poorer people had to be satisfied with goods that were roughly and cheaply made.

When the population of Europe increased, there was a demand for goods of better quality. These goods had to be produced in factories and workshops where hundreds of workers were employed. The invention of the steam engine helped manufacturers by giving them cheaper power to work their machines. Machines took the place of men. Production was increased. People were able to buy articles of good quality at low prices. The age of mass production had arrived. A 'mass' is a large number or quantity. Mass production means the manufacture of a large number of identical articles by the use of machinery. Cars, radios and cameras are examples of many types of articles that are mass produced today.

A conveyor belt plays a large part in mass production. By means of the conveyor belt, which moves continuously, articles are conveyed from point to point during the various stages in their manufacture. A lot of time is saved in this way.

A visit to a factory is an interesting experience. Take for example, a biscuit factory. The whole process of biscuit making is done by machinery. First of all the ingredients such as flour, sugar, fat and water are put into a mixing machine. The mixture comes out of the mixing machine in the form of dough and is pressed on to a machine that presses the dough in moulds. In these moulds the dough is given the shape of biscuits. The biscuits are taken on a conveyor belt to the oven. As they move through the oven, they are slowly cooked. When they are cool, they are taken off the moving belt by workers and packed into boxes. The boxes are weighed, made air tight and wrapped. Then they are ready to leave the factory.

2. Read the passage carefully and answer the questions given below.

A craftwork is an applied form of art, a social product reflecting the inclusive nature of folk imagination. A craftwork, which usually doesn't bear the signature of its maker, retains a personal touch. When we look at a thirty year old nakshikantha, we wonder at its motifs and designs that point to the artistic ingenuity and the presence of the maker in it. The fact that we don't know her name or any other details about her doesn't take anything away from our appreciation of the artist. Indeed the intimate nature of the kantha and the tactile feeling it generates animate the work and make it very inviting.

A craftwork is shaped by the interaction of individual creativity and community aesthetics, utility functions and human values. It is distinguished by its maker's desire to locate himself or herself in the wider and ever changing cultural aspirations of the community, and subsequently of the market. But even when the market is an important factor, community aesthetics remains the factor determining the form and content of the craftwork. The exquisite terracotta dolls from Dinajpur dating back to early 1940s, that form a part of the Bangladeshi Museum's collection were mostly bought from village fairs by some patron. They were no doubt meant by consumers, but the dolls reflect community aesthetics in such a manner that the market has not been able to impose its own preferences on them.

A craftwork is always a dynamic object evolving and always abreast of changing tastes and preferences. It also represents a way of life and a cultural flavor. Therefore changes in lifestyle and material conditions are expected to have their impact on craftworks and their production. But there is a clash between expectations of pure handmade craftworks and the market need for mechanically produced craftworks. There is no easy solution to the problems that craftworks face in our time. Crafts that are disappearing can and should be revived, even where the machine has made the prospect difficult. Crafts that are still practiced can be safeguarded and made to consolidate their position further.

Answer the following questions according to the given instruction.

There is excitement in the film studio. They are shooting a scene from the film 'the Path of Power.' The Director of the film is there with a team of technicians. His task is a difficult one. He has to be creative, but at the same time he has to satisfy popular taste. He has to consider many different elements such as the story and the scenario, the dialogue and the action, the camera-work and lighting, and he has to get them all combined into an intelligible motion picture. His assistants—the cameraman, the make-up artist and several others—are all helping him in the task. The Director has told the chief cameraman in what part of the stage set the action is going to take place. The chief cameraman has the camera set up, adjusted and focused by his assistants. An assistant brings in new film and the chief cameraman has the camera loaded with it. The actors are on the set. The set is a large apartment, expensively furnished. The Director tells the actors, for the last time, what the action is going to be and how he wants to have it performed. He is quite satisfied with the rehearsal he has had already. The actors take up their positions. The cameramen get their camera focused on the scene. The man in charge of the lighting has two microphones hidden out of sight of the camera. These are to catch the words of the actors. In the recording room the Director of Sound gets the recording apparatus adjusted to record the dialogue between the actors. The chief cameraman has the electric current turned on. The current is needed to drive the motors of the cameras. Everything is ready for the shooting of the scene.

Now the assistant Director gets the studio door shut. A buzzer signals that the scene is going to be shot. The Director's voice calls out, 'Silence! Get ready!' A green light comes on. A board, giving the details of the scene and shot number, is held before the camera. The camera is switched on. The board is then removed, leaving the camera focused on the actors. This is the moment when the action begins. The whirr of the camera indicates that the shooting of the scene is taking place. The leading actor speaks his line. 'Cut!' shouts the Director. The camera stops immediately. All look round in surprise. The Director angrily tells the make-up artist to fix the actor's beard.

Instinctively the actor's hand goes up to his chin. The beard is not there! He hurriedly gets it fixed by the make-up artist. The shooting of the Scene-10 -Shot 12 begins again. The action and dialogue continue without interruption. 'Cut!' shout the Director. 'What's wrong this time?' asks an angry actor who has been on the set for two whole hours. 'There's nothing wrong. It's perfect,' smiles back the Director. Everyone sighs with relief.

The history of man is the history of war. Throughout the ages, man has been concerned with the problem of preventing war. If all the people in the world loved peace, no organization to ensure peace would be necessary to outlaw war. But history has proved to mankind that the nations of the world have not been willing to observe these conditions.

The League of Nations, the first association of nations established to work for peace, was founded in 1919. For four years from 1914, war had raged throughout Europe. The fighting in this war had been more destructive than anything that mankind had ever experienced. The League of Nations aimed at outlawing war and settling international disputes by peaceful means- by discussion instead of by force. For twenty five years the League of Nations struggled to survive. With the outbreak of the Second World War, in 1939, it ceased to function. If it had been able to keep its promise of enforcing disarmament, there would not have been another war. Britain and France had disarmed, but other nations had not followed their example. Some nations had defied the League of Nations and gone to war with their neighbors.

These events led to the Second World War in 1939. This war raged over the continents and seas of the world from 1939 to 1945. Millions of soldiers, sailors and airmen were killed. Thousands of innocent civilians were the victims of deadly weapons. If there had been no war, all this suffering could have been avoided. When the war ended, the people of all the nations began praying for a secure, peaceful world without any fear of war. This desire for world peace led to the founding of the United Nations Organization (UNO).

On October 24 1945, representatives of fifty-one nations met to form an association called the United Nations Organization. The two main aims of UNO are the maintenance of international peace and security and the promotion of human welfare throughout the world. Since then the organization has survived with difficulty. It has prevented a series of international disputes that could have involved the world in a nuclear war. The successful handling of these disputes has proved that UNO can help in the maintenance of world peace. If UNO had failed to settle them, the world might by now have been involved in a global war and completely destroyed. If it can continue to settle disputes peacefully, the fear of a worldwide disaster will disappear. If it fails, there may be no other hope for mankind.

2. The recent controversy around a question in this year's HSC Bangla First Paper exam has, once again, brought to light the many deficiencies in our education system. It makes us wonder if the so-called "creative" question pattern is serving the purpose of inspiring critical thinking when the teachers themselves are so lackluster in their performances.

The creative question system was first introduced in 2008 to promote critical thinking and move students away from blindly memorizing guidebooks. However, many teachers still remain woefully unprepared to set questions under this system. According to a government survey, about 38 percent of secondary and higher secondary school teachers in Bangladesh cannot set question papers under the creative method. More than half of all teachers have not been trained in setting creative questions. Teachers who did receive some training complained that it was not adequate.

This has resulted in some teachers copying questions directly out of guidebooks, as had reportedly happened in the 2020 SSC Bangla exam. Many others are accused of buying questions from teaching associations, even though there are strict government orders against doing so. The other problem that has arisen from this is the appearance of questionable questions in public examination papers, the last of which is mentioned above.

All these suggest that many of our teachers lack the necessary guidance to set creative questions, in the absence of adequate training or comprehensive guidelines of what's acceptable to posit in a question. At a high time we took a look at what these trainings contain and evaluated whether our teachers themselves lack the sensitivity and critical thinking needed to foster such skills in their students.

Our education system for young students should inspire them to think critically and creatively. An atmosphere of learning and free thinking should be upheld at all the educational institutions across the country, and our teachers should be trained to maintain that. Academic freedom and a free exchange of ideas should be the first priority of our educators. Failing that and preparing communal question papers instead will do irreparable harm to our society.

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

To many people, especially working people, co-operation means the Co-operative Movement. This movement was started by working people for the benefit of working people. It began in Rochdale, an industrial town in the North of England, in 1844. In that year a group of people who were employed in the factories of Rochdale decided that they would open a shop. This may not perhaps be considered a very original decision, or one that could be important for anybody except the people who took it. It was, however, of worldwide importance, though nobody could have guessed this at the time. The decision was, in fact, original in one very important detail, namely that it was taken by people who were to be the customers as well as the owners of the shop. A small sum of money was contributed by each member of the scheme. None of them was able to contribute much, but the total of their contributions was sufficient to pay for the premises of the shop and for the goods which were needed to stock it. The profit which was made by the sale of the goods to members was used to buy more goods, and any money left over after these goods had been bought was divided out amongst the members. In this way they were able to buy necessary goods at reasonable prices and also to share in the profit from their own enterprise. The main principles which were adopted by the Rochdale co-operators when they opened their shop were:

1. Open membership. Anyone living in the Rochdale area was allowed to join.
2. Democratic control (one member, one vote).
3. Distribution of surplus income amongst members, once all other expenses had been paid.
4. Political and religious neutrality.
5. Trading for cash only. Members had to pay for their purchases before they could take them away from the shop.
6. Encouragement of education.

These principles have been recognized throughout the world as the basis of a genuine co-operative movement. From its humble beginnings in Rochdale the movement has spread to many countries. Local Co-operative Societies have been founded for trading throughout Britain, and a central organization, the Co-operative Wholesale Society, manufactures a wide variety of goods which member Societies can buy from it to sell in their shops. It also acts - as a link between them and helps them to co-operate nationally as well as locally. The International Co-operative Alliance has also been founded to make this co-operation possible amongst members of the movement with similar principles all over the world, in any country where such societies have been or will be founded. Movement in Britain, and societies have been founded abroad for all sorts of purposes from simple trading and running shops to hiring farm machinery to members who cannot afford to buy their own; and Marketing Societies have been recognized as the best way for producers of food and other crops to sell their produce.

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow

Much of today's business is conducted across international borders, and while the majority of the global business community might share the use of English as a common language, the nuances and expectations of business communication might differ greatly from culture to culture. A lack of understanding of the cultural norms and practices of our business acquaintances can result in unfair judgements, misunderstandings and breakdowns in communication. Here are three basic areas of differences in the business etiquette around the world that could help stand you in good stead when you next find yourself working with someone from a different culture.

Addressing someone

When discussing this topic in a training course, a German trainee and a British trainee got into a hot debate about whether it was appropriate for someone with a doctorate to use the corresponding title on their business card. The British trainee maintained that anyone who wasn't a medical doctor expecting to be addressed as 'Dr' was disgustingly pompous and full of themselves. The German trainee, however, argued that the hard work and years of education put into earning that PhD should give them full rights to expect to be addressed as 'Dr'. This stark difference in opinion over something that could be conceived as minor and thus easily overlooked goes to show that we often attach meaning to even the most mundane practices. When things that we are used to are done differently, it could spark the strongest reactions in us. While many Continental Europeans and Latin Americans prefer to be addressed with a title, for example Mr or Ms and their surname when meeting someone in a business context for the first time, Americans, and increasingly the British, now tend to prefer using their first names. The best thing to do is to listen and observe how your conversation partner addresses you and, if you are still unsure, do not be afraid to ask them how they would like to be addressed.

Smiling

A famous Russian proverb states that 'a smile without reason is a sign of idiocy' and a so-called 'smile of respect' is seen as insincere and often regarded with suspicion in Russia. Yet in countries like the United States, Australia and Britain, smiling is often interpreted as a sign of openness, friendship and respect, and is frequently used to break the ice. In a piece of research done on smiles across cultures, the researchers found that smiling individuals were considered more intelligent than non-smiling people in countries such as Germany, Switzerland, China and Malaysia. However, in countries like Russia, Japan, South Korea and Iran, pictures of smiling faces were rated as less intelligent than the non-smiling ones. Meanwhile, in countries like India, Argentina and the Maldives, smiling was associated with dishonesty.

4. Write true or false.

1 x 3 = 3

- a. To the German trainee, having a PhD is equivalent to being a medical doctor.
- b. Sometimes, the smallest things can trigger a huge emotional response in us, especially when they are things we are not used to.
- c. In the research done on the perceptions of smiles, people from different countries were asked to rate photos of smiling faces and non-smiling ones.

5. Find expressions in the passage similar in meaning to these

1 x 3 = 3

- a. rules governing socially acceptable behavior
- b. an understanding of something that is not correct
- c. very often or many times

6. Write four types of smiling position which signifies different meaning in different countries. 4

There is excitement in the film studio. They are shooting a scene from the film 'the Path of Power.' The Director of the film is there with a team of technicians. His task is a difficult one. He has to be creative, but at the same time he has to satisfy popular taste. He has to consider many different elements such as the story and the scenario, the dialogue and the action, the camera-work and lighting, and he has to get them all combined into an intelligible motion picture. His assistants—the cameraman, the make-up artist and several others—are all helping him in the task. The Director has told the chief cameraman in what part of the stage set the action is going to take place. The chief cameraman has the camera set up, adjusted and focused by his assistants. An assistant brings in new film and the chief cameraman has the camera loaded with it. The actors are on the set. The set is a large apartment, expensively furnished. The Director tells the actors, for the last time, what the action is going to be and how he wants to have it performed. He is quite satisfied with the rehearsal he has had already. The actors take up their positions. The cameramen get their camera focused on the scene. The man in charge of the lighting has two microphones hidden out of sight of the camera. These are to catch the words of the actors. In the recording room the Director of Sound gets the recording apparatus adjusted to record the dialogue between the actors. The chief cameraman has the electric current turned on. The current is needed to drive the motors of the cameras. Everything is ready for the shooting of the scene.

Now the Assistant Director gets the studio door shut. A buzzer signals that the scene is going to be shot. The Director's voice calls out, 'Silence! Get ready!' A green light comes on. A board, giving the details of the scene and shot number, is held before the camera. The camera is switched on. The board is then removed, leaving the camera focused on the actors. This is the moment when the action begins. The whirr of the camera indicates that the shooting of the scene is taking place. The leading actor speaks his line. 'Cut!' shouts the Director. The camera stops immediately. All look round in surprise. The Director angrily tells the make-up artist to fix the actor's beard.

Instinctively the actor's hand goes up to his chin. The beard is not there! He hurriedly gets it fixed by the make-up artist. The shooting of the Scene-10 –Shot 12 begins again. The action and dialogue continue without interruption. 'Cut!' shout the Director. 'What's wrong this time?' asks an angry actor who has been on the set for two whole hours. 'There's nothing wrong. It's perfect,' smiles back the Director. Everyone sighs with relief.

Eight years back, young Egyptians were full of hope. On January 25, 2011, they rose up against Hosni Mubarak and triumphed. Mubarak stepped down and a military council assumed power until Mohammed Morsi was sworn in on June 30, 2012, as Egypt's first democratically elected president. One year later, Morsi was swiftly deposed in a popularly backed military coup led by then-General Abdel Fattah al-Sisi. Ever since, the latter became the de facto – and since June 2014 the de jure – ruler of Egypt.

The once-embattled ancient regime is back with full force. Not only to consolidate its power in the present, but also to control the past. Yet, since the outbreak of the January 25 Revolution, besides the Islamists, two distinct communities were – and still are – in conflict, among other things, over the revolution's nature and principles: the regime and the revolutionary activists.
